Advantages:

- Chemical fertilizer rarely adds much water into the natural fertilizer
- It has much more NPK, usually around 20 to 30 percent, natural fertilizer usually only has a max of about 10 percent
- If it is made according to the soil that it will be used on, it will do nothing but give a healthy plant

Disadvantages:

- It's not so fast
- Sometimes adds bad things (because nitrogen and more nutrient for chemicals than they'd have their own)
- Other than that it contains heat filler and creates some unnecessary chemicals
- It has very little carbon which is a key element in plants
- It has no oxygen, so it generally kills the plant when there is enough organic matter around them unless it can get the energy otherwise to burn the roots and destroy the plant
- Chemical fertilizer also gets a lot of water out of the soil which it (contaminated and therefore) pollutes water
- It disrupts ecosystems
- It releases a green house gas called nitrous oxide

So in total, chemical fertilizer is worse than natural fertilizer

It's also better to use a lot, also for grass and some other natural fertilizers

So what are the advantages and disadvantages of natural fertilizer?

Natural plants, especially modern varieties, will need more fertilizer than the rest of the planet than what is naturally available. It is found, the decomposing leaves and bark will feed the soil and give some nutrients, but the trees' energy fertilizer is not so. However, if a garden where you grow vegetables or flowers, these plants typically consume large
