MasteringBiology

School Name: University of Hawaii, Honolulu, HI
Course Name: Introduction to Biology II
Course Format: Lecture

Key Results Students who consistently attempt the MasteringBiology homework tend to have significantly higher exam scores than students who skip the assignments.

Submitted by
Justin Wilguerny, Lecturer
Course materials
Campbell Biology, Reece, Urry, Cain, Wasserman, Minorsky, and Jackson

About the Course
The University of Hawaii System includes 10 campuses and dozens of educational, training, and research centers across the Hawaiian Islands. As the public system of higher education in Hawaii, the system enrolls more than 52,000 undergraduate students.
Introduction to Biology II is the second course in a two-semester sequence for life science majors. It is a three-credit lecture course, with a separate, concurrent lab. Both the lecture and lab courses use MasteringBiology. Topics covered include the anatomy, physiology, and systematics of plants and animals; behavior; and ecosystems, populations, and communities. This study encompasses only the lecture portion of the course.

Challenges and Goals
Large course enrollments make it difficult for Lecturer Justin Wilguerny to identify before the first exam students who are struggling or at risk. He believes that students need timely feedback to help identify the concepts they need to work on and resources to help guide them through the learning process. He implemented MasteringBiology to provide his students with immediate feedback and automatic grading while they do their homework, so they know where to focus remediation efforts.

Implementation
In fall 2013, Wilguerny used MasteringBiology for homework with the goal of helping students review course concepts and prepare for exams. He gave three exams and assigned eight MasteringBiology homework assignments during the semester.

Wilguerny assigned a post-lecture MasteringBiology assignment for each chapter covered. Assignments were posted at the end of each week on the topics covered during that week, and primarily consisted of activity questions. Assignments were untimed, and students had until the end of the following week to complete them.

Assessments

40 percent	Final exam
40 percent	Exams (two)
15 percent	MasteringBiology
5 percent	Attendance

Results and Data
Data for the fall 2013 semester were analyzed, primarily looking at the course performance of students who attempted MasteringBiology homework assignments versus students who skipped one or more assignments (which was considered to be an assignment with a score of zero).
Figure 1 shows that students who skipped two or more out of eight MasteringBiology homework assignments earned statistically significantly lower exam averages than did students who attempted all MasteringBiology homework assignments.
The results of the analysis show the following:

- The average number of MasteringBiology homework assignments skipped was 1.8.
- Thirty-five percent of students attempted all of the MasteringBiology homework assignments and earned an average homework score of 92 percent.
- Forty-four percent of students skipped three or more MasteringBiology homework assignments and earned an average homework score of 47 percent.
