What Do "They" Look For?

Admissions officers review numerous applications, frequently reading as many as fifty per day. Although it's impossible to predict exactly what a particular college is looking for in its applicants, colleges generally want to admit a mix of students who can handle the academic workload and make a positive contribution to the college experience—for themselves and for their classmates.

- To get a favorable reaction from admissions officers, your application should demonstrate:
- Serious intent to pursue a college-level education
- Genuine desire to attend the particular college
- Correspondence between your abilities and interests and what the school needs and has to offer
- Ability to think clearly, logically and creatively
- Ability to write interesting, thoughtful essays that keep your reader's attention and make you stand out from other applicants

What Admissions Officers Look For

- You - The person behind the GPA, the test scores, and the extracurricular activities.
- Surprise - An unexpected angle on your topic, even if the experience you're writing about seems ordinary.
- Genuineness - Writing as yourself, without taking yourself too seriously; relying on your own vocabulary, rather than the thesaurus or the words your parents think you should use. Whatever you do, don't lie. Lying can provide grounds for automatic rejection. No matter how confident you are that you won't get caught, never fudge the facts in an essay or on any other part of your application.
- Thoughtfulness - Consideration of your experiences and their meanings, both to yourself and to others, and showing through your reflection that nothing is lost on you.

How To Help Them Find It

Think About Who Your Audience Is - This will most likely be five or six recent graduates of the college you're applying to and an experienced director of admissions, all of whom have spent the last month reading thousands of applications. This is an overworked audience on whom your essay

Essay #1: College Application Essay

Purpose: Your purpose here is to persuade readers that you are college material, that you think creatively and will benefit the proposed school by attending it. How you go about doing that is entirely up to you, but most prompts require some sort of descriptive narrative essay with an implicit—or stated—thesis. If it's good enough for them, ...

Audience: Your audience is the admissions board for the university to which you're applying. Remember, these readers are educated, and they are sifting through hundreds, perhaps even thousands of applications in search of the "standout" candidate.

Task: Pick one of the prompts below and compose an essay that will wow readers and make you a "shoo-in" for their institution.

1. "Creative people state that taking risks often promotes important discoveries in their lives or work. Discuss a risk that has led to a significant change (positive or negative) in your personal or intellectual life."
2. "Describe the most challenging obstacle you have had to overcome; discuss its impact and tell what you have learned from the experience."
3. "To learn to think is to learn to question. Discuss a matter you once thought you knew 'for sure' that you have since learned to question."
4. "Do you believe there's a generational gap? Describe the differences between your generation and others."
5. "Discuss some issue of personal, local, national, or international concern and its importance to you."
6. "In your opinion, what is the greatest challenge that your generation will face? What ideas do you have for dealing with this issue?"
7. "John Keats said, 'Even a proverb is no proverb to you till your life has illustrated it.' Please tell us about an experience in your own life which illustrated a proverb, maxim, or quote that has special meaning for you."

Your essay should be two to three pages in length. I say that now because inevitably someone has already thought of asking that question or been dreading my answering it. Also, many institutions limit responses to 500 words—to see how many applicants can effectively communicate their intended message concisely. Remember, proposals are due one week from today at the latest. Feel free to submit one prior to the due date—as soon as tomorrow if you like—but don't expect to be given the green light to begin writing if you haven't thoroughly contemplated all aspects of the assignment.

Oh, and try to have fun with this assignment. Writing does not have to be the monotonous chore we often make it out to be.
