Notes for Five Argumentative Essays

- The use of animals in scientific research
- Should motor traffic be restricted?
- Capital punishment (the Death Penalty)
- Euthanasia should be legalized
- Examinations should be abolished

These tables outline the main arguments used when debating five controversial topics. The points have been arranged into simple "For/Against" columns.

It is convenient to have a ready-made list of arguments, but to write an effective essay you must decide upon a structure. There are two basic options:

Option 1: Set 'em up and knock em down

Look at my model essay on zoos for an example of this approach. Using this approach, you present each of your opponents' arguments in turn and demonstrate that it is false or weak - you "knock it down". This is a very effective approach because you acknowledge that other views exist but persuade the reader that yours are superior.

Option 2: The balanced approach

You will find an example of this approach for an essay about handgun ownership on the 16C5E Revision page here (produced by the Central European University language teaching centre). Using this approach, you look at both sides of the argument in a more balanced way. In the end, however, you must indicate your opinion. The basic structure is: Introduction >» Points in Favour >» Against >» Conclusion (including your opinion). WARNING This approach can sound weak
